WASHINGTON, D. C., June 4.

DEBATE IN THE HOUSE ON THE NEW TAX BILL.

Direct debate on the Tax bill by sections, in which orders are limited to five minutes, was begun to-day at 1 o'clock. Mr. Blaine got the floor and moved to strike out the first section, which makes the Revenue Bureau an independent department. His argument was that under the present law by the commissioner of internal revenue, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, the whole machinery of the bureau is in his own hands, and he is responsible for the action of every officer. The debate was very spirited, and was participated in by Messrs. Blaine, Hooper, Dawes, Schenck, Kelley, Maynard, Hutchinson, Woodward, Cobb, Jones, Pike, Mullins, Randall, and Chanler. Mr. Hooper, of Boston, opposed the motion to strike out. Mr. Chanler was the only Democrat who fully sustained Mr. Randall's position on the bill. The practical question in the bill on the ground that it was unconstitutional, and that the Supreme Court would so decide. Mr. Chanler, of the Third Pennsylvania District, whose remarks were occasionally applauded by Republicans, and which were referred to by Randall, Kelley, and others, as those of the Treasury substantially reports on the bill as now before the House, and that it was the most correct or workable scheme in the country, was followed by Mr. Kelley, of the Third district of the city and county of Philadelphia, Mr. Kelley's remarks were directed chiefly to the reasons given by Mr. Chanler for the opposition of the Treasury Department to the bill. He said that he was as free from the committees, Mr. Secretary Boutwell and the rest as to the members of this or any other House, but he did think the Secretary of the Treasury ought to be left free to the action of the House, and not be compelled to submit to the dictation of any officer of the Government. He would have voted against Mr. Chanler's amendment, but he thought it was a good one, and he would vote for it. He would not vote for the section as it came from the committee. Mr. Boutwell had been in the room as to the manner of their power in the service, but left that the Secretary of the Treasury should be left free to act as he thought proper
